INTRODUCTION

With the publication of this edition the National Clearinghouse for Commuter Programs reaffirms its commitment to help professionals stay up-to-date with the literature on commuter students in higher education.

THE NATIONAL CLEARINGHOUSE FOR COMMUTER PROGRAMS

The primary focus of the National Clearinghouse for Commuter Programs is on students in higher education who do not live in institution-owned housing. The Clearinghouse was created to share data concerning characteristics and needs of commuter students and to establish channels of communication among schools interested and/or involved in services, programs, advocacy and research with regard to the student living off campus.

WHO ARE COMMUTER STUDENTS?

Although different definitions of "commuter" students exist, the National Clearinghouse for Commuter Programs defines a commuter as any student not living on campus. The commuting student can be the traditional student between the ages of 18 and 21 years, living at home with parents, alone in an apartment or in a house with other commuting students; the older returning student; the fully employed person pursuing a career-enhancing degree; the retiree. The commuter may be a full-time student or may take only one course per semester. He/she may live within walking distance of the campus or drive 50 or more miles each way.

SERVICES OF THE NATIONAL CLEARINGHOUSE

The Commuter -- More than just a newsletter, the Commuter is a quarterly publication of articles of concern to (and often written by) the Clearinghouse membership. Recent topical issues have focused on communication and technology, adult learners, and urban campus concerns.

"Commuter Students: References and Resources"--"References and Resources" contains a comprehensive cross-referenced listing of relevant literature on commuter students and commuter institutions, as well as associations and organizations that serve commuting students.

"Research Projects" -- The Clearinghouse is actively involved in conducting and promoting research about issues related to commuter students and how to serve them. Recent illustrative research projects conducted by the Clearinghouse include: "Commuter Institution Index"--a compendium of programs and services offered by higher education institutions; Office Models Case Studies--individual descriptions of how campuses organize to serve commuter students; Examples of Good Practice--highlights of noteworthy services, programs, advocacy, and research about commuting students.

The Clearinghouse maintains a file of relevant research bulletins published by various commuter institutions and copies of brochures, handbooks, program descriptions, newsletters, and other publications of member institutions.

Other services of the Clearinghouse include:

--a referral service for linking individuals with specific concerns with those who have tried and/or established programs in response to those concerns.

--liaison with American College Personnel Association Commission XVII, Commuter Programs.

--membership in Council for the Advancement of Standards for Student Services/Development Programs.

--liaison with the National Association of Student Personnel Administrators Commuter Network.
